Daniel M. Braude is a partner at Wilson Elser Moskowitz Edelman & Dicker LLP where he centers his practice on complex litigation involving product liability and commercial disputes, with an emphasis on related electronic discovery and document preservation issues. Focused on the information lifecycle, Mr. Braude addresses the challenges associated with changing technology, cloud computing, and related data privacy and information security issues. Mr. Braude graduated cum laude with a J.D. degree from Seton Hall University School of Law and earned his B.S. degree from Lehigh University. He is also a Certified Information Privacy Professional (CIPP/US).

As co-chair of Wilson Elser's e-Discovery practice, Mr. Braude serves as a resource within the firm and for clients on a wide range of topics relating to electronically stored information (ESI). His e-Discovery work includes managing electronic document review efforts, evaluating and employing methods of technology-assisted review, and supervising teams of contract attorneys on large-scale review projects. Additionally, Mr. Braude counsels clients on electronic document retention issues and designs legal hold procedures to assist clients with defensible and cost-effective ESI preservation. He routinely serves as discovery counsel in commercial and product liability matters, frequently on behalf of manufacturers engaged in pattern litigation, and represents Wilson Elser as its designated e-Discovery liaison for large firm clients.

In the field of information governance, Mr. Braude works with organizations to effectively manage and organize their information assets while containing costs and avoiding related organizational risks. He performs auditing, assessment and investigation of current information governance practices and clients toward their objectives by drafting document-retention plans, social media guidelines, cloud computing policies, permissible use policies and "bring your own device" policies. At the same time, he counsels clients on related data security issues and litigation readiness concerns, including the evaluation of legacy data retention and disposal. Mr. Braude routinely engages with clients' IT employees, records managers and additional key stakeholders to train employees and monitor compliance with information governance policies.

In the product liability field, Mr. Braude represents manufacturers including those in the transportation and recreational products industries. His notable experience includes case management and coordination of defense efforts in pattern litigation and appearing as coordinating counsel at depositions around the country. He frequently confers and consults with engineers on technical issues related to product design and manufacturing. Additionally, Mr. Braude represents clients in commercial disputes, as either plaintiffs or defendants, often in matters involving subcontractors and component suppliers. In addition, he frequently counsels contractors in the public procurement arena with regard to responding to requests for proposals and related procurement issues.

Mr. Christopher was admitted to practice law in the State of New York in 2008. Mr. Christopher graduated with a B.A. in Political Science from Villanova University (2003) and received his J.D. from Touro College Jacob D. Fuchsberg Law Center (2007), magna cum laude.

W. Russell Corker, Esq.

Law Offices of W. Russell Corker, PC
82 Main Street, Suite 300
Huntington, NY 11743
(631) 923-3700
rcorker@corkerlaw.com

W. Russell Corker's life as a trial lawyer began in 1973 while still a student at Boston University School of Law where, as part of a special trial advocacy program, he was permitted to litigate cases in the District Courts of Boston. During law school, he also interned at the United States Attorney's Office in Boston for two years, where he assisted in and observed many trials. Upon his graduation in 1974, he moved to Long Island and took a position as an Assistant District Attorney in Nassau County. Initially he started in traffic court, trying twenty or more cases a day. That experience let him move through the ranks to eventually prosecute major felonies. In 1978, he moved from criminal law to the civil side, taking a position as a trial attorney for a firm that exclusively represented physicians and hospitals in medical malpractice lawsuits. Medical malpractice litigation was still relatively uncommon at that time. Over the next thirty plus years, the area of law known as medical malpractice litigation continued to change along with the American culture. In 1980, his career path changed again when he switched sides and began representing patients in medical malpractice lawsuits. He took a position as the principal trial attorney for a major Long Island plaintiff's firm. From then until now, his practice has been focused primarily on representing patients and their families in medical malpractice lawsuits and severe personal injury cases. During this period, he also began taking classes at night at local universities in the field of medicine and the human body, which he did for the next five years. He remained with that firm until 2012, when he opened his own office on Main Street in Huntington Village, five blocks from his home, and a second office on Franklin Avenue in Garden City, to continue representing primarily victims of medical malpractice.

In 1980, Russell also began lecturing to the legal profession, and has continued to do so on a regular basis. He taught trial practice, medicine, principles of persuasion, courtroom technology, and a host of other subjects to thousands of lawyers over the succeeding 34 years. He has always been committed to sharing what he has learned with other lawyers in order to benefit their clients and our judicial system. Teaching others has the added advantage of keeping him abreast of current trends and techniques in his field, and he continuously strives to be a better trial attorney. While he has received a number of honors during his career — such as Best Lawyers in New York, New York Metro Super Lawyers, the highest rating by Martindale Hubbell, and Ten Leaders in Civil Trial Practice on Long Island — he is most proud of being an active member of the legal community. He is honored by being consistently asked to chair and speak at programs to teach practicing lawyers to become better trial attorneys.

W. Russell Corker considers the personal relationship between the client and himself to be a critical part of litigation. Since beginning his career, he has always considered it important to be actively involved with every case that he might ultimately take to trial. While most firms relegate many tasks associated with litigation — such as interviewing the client, directing medical record processing and review, depositions and trial preparation, to paralegals and junior attorneys — Russ has always considered such responsibilities to be the essence of doing it the right way. He has always considered it a priority to directly interact with his clients from the very beginning of the case until the matter is concluded. All of his clients go to him because, for most of them, they have experienced one of the worst events in their lives; their worlds have been turned upside down. They are often lacking in answers as to why such a thing has happened. His responsibility is to help guide them from this rocky shore, across a wide lake, to the safety and calm on the other side. Litigation is an intense experience, so it is critical that he has a special relationship and cooperation directly with all of his clients. To maintain the level of interaction necessary, Russ limits the number of cases that he puts into litigation so that he can personally handle each case. It is important to not only seek fair and just compensation for the losses sustained by his clients, but help them to begin the long and difficult process of healing after such a dramatic loss. Guidance, education, experience and trust is what you can expect from W. Russell Corker as your attorney. After many years of being a trial attorney, he still enjoys his work as much now as he ever has and hopes to continue to represent his clients for many years to come.

Ronald J. Friedman is a partner in the Bankruptcy and Creditors' Rights and Corporate Restructuring Groups, as well as the Deputy Partner-In-Charge of the Firm. Ron is widely regarded as a leading practitioner in the field of bankruptcy and creditor's rights, with vast experience in representing all forms of clients including bankruptcy trustees, liquidating trustees, creditors, creditor committees, and parties involved in out of court work-outs. Over the course of his career, Ron has worked on cases in a multitude of jurisdictions and has routinely problem solved with our clients to achieve favorable business results. It is quite common for the most difficult and tense business situations to be brought to Ron's attention. His keen ability to cut through the complex issues and achieve a consensus solution (whether in or out of court) usually provide all parties to the dispute with a platform to move forward and reach a resolution. Ron has also been appointed as the receiver and liquidating trustee in a number of cases, successfully operating and winding down businesses of all forms and size.

Ron represents clients in bankruptcy cases, workouts, restructurings, liquidations, distressed debt transactions, acquisitions, and complex litigation. He also has extensive experience counseling clients in the telecommunications, real estate, and equipment leasing industries on all facets of their corporate operations. Recently, when a long standing client of the Firm required assistance in the negotiation and sale of his business, Ron was intimately involved in the purchase price negotiation, the term sheet preparation, and the consummation of the asset purchase agreement so that the client was able to keep his focus and attention on the day to day operations of the business. That collaboration and expert guidance enhanced the client's ability to achieve the targeted purchase price while ensuring that the transaction went from dream to reality.

In addition to his legal practice, Ron serves as the President and Chairman of the Board of Directors for the Gulls Amateur Hockey Association, a not-for-profit organization that has been operating in Nassau County for over 40 years. Ron is also a member of the Board of Directors of the (i) Theodore Roosevelt Council of the Boy Scouts America; (ii) the Friends of Long Island Wrestling, an organization dedicated to promoting amateur wrestling; (iii) the Twin Rinks at Eisenhower LLC, a state-of-the-art twin ice rink facility in Nassau County; and (iv) the Muskegon Lumberjacks, a franchise member of the USHL.
