Robert Briglio has practiced civil rights litigation on behalf of persons with disabilities since graduating from the inaugural class at CUNY Law School in 1986. Most of the litigation was conducted at the Legal Services Corporation Office on Long Island. Cases involved systemic issues related to housing, receipt of health care and public benefits, access to government programs such as public transportation and pedestrian crossings, discriminatory zoning practices, public accommodation access, among other issues. Mr. Briglio has been an Administrative Law Judge since 1994, principally hearing matters under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act in New York City and throughout New York State.
