The World of Sanctions: How Did We Adjust?

Many industries and markets in the EU, US and other countries were caught by surprise by the scope and impact of the economic and trade sanctions imposed on Russia and Belarus this year. Companies, financial institutions, and third-country governments have had to adapt quickly to the new reality of:

- the broadest multilateral trade restrictions on any country in the world,
- growing restrictions on professional services to parties in Russia,
- multilateral financial sanctions as broad as those imposed on Iran and other embargoed countries,
- escalating restrictions on trade in Russian-origin petroleum, gas, and solid fuels.

In this panel we will discuss how the private and public sectors have adapted to these broad restrictions on trade and have been addressing the indirect impacts on trade with and through other countries. We will flag key issues to be alert for, issues that many companies might be overlooking, and where the sanctions are likely headed next.

Investments into the Region: Realities and Prospects

While the war has significantly affected the investment climate in the region lowering the flow of regular transactions down to almost zero, at the same time it gave rise to a new type of investments triggered by the destruction of critical infrastructure, increased demand in military ammunition and attempts of businesses to diversify the risks. At this Panel we will discuss the realities and prospects of investments in both Ukraine and Poland. We will listen to the high-ranking representative of Ukrainian government who will present the current and upcoming investment opportunities in Ukraine covering the conditions, incentives, and plans for attracting funds. The representatives of the international donors and financial organizations will speak about their projects and areas of focus in the region. We will also look at two practical show cases of both Polish and Ukrainian businesses expanding during war time, they will share their experience of taking risk and developing their business ideas in such a complicated environment.

SESSION 5

Restructuring/Reconstruction of the Region

While Post-war investment and economic development will depend on many factors, this panel will focus on two issues of overriding importance: the role of international financial and governmental institutions, and the strengthening of the rule of law in Ukraine. Aside from the tragedy and brutality, the invasion is a cultural watershed moment, where Ukraine may change the way it does and wants to do business and adjusts its law and culture to reflect a stronger rule of law. The panelists and moderators have experience in the region and knowledge which can both explain and add to the ongoing discussion on these points.
