Who are we? New York State Bar Association and the International Section

The New York State Bar Association (NYSBA) is the largest voluntary state bar organization in the United States and has members across the globe that have a nexus to New York law.

The International Section is one of NYSBA's most active sections having over 2,000 members internationally with chapters in more than 70 countries worldwide and is NYSBA's global representative and international advocate for the rule of law.

In addition, the NYSBA International Section brings members together to discuss and influence the resolution of key legal practice issues before local, state, national and international policy makers. Members include legal professionals from major international law firms, multi-national corporations, and other organizations that influence, and are influenced by, international law.

What is the Global Conference?

Each year, NYSBA's International Section hosts a conference in a different city outside of the United States to provide American and foreign colleagues the opportunity to meet, network, and expand their international practices. Our most recent conferences have been held in Hamburg (2025), Seoul (2024), Mexico (2023), London (2022), New York City (2022), Tokyo, (2019), Montréal (2018), Antigua (2017), Paris (2016), São Paulo (2015), Vienna (2014), Hanoi (2013), Lisbon (2012), and Panama (2011).

9:00 a.m. – 10:15 a.m.	PLENARY II – The Foundations of the Rules-based International Order, and the Evolution of Private International Law This plenary session examines the evolving foundations of the rules-based international order and its intersection with private international law at a moment of fundamental global shifts. Panelists will discuss authoritarian impulses challenging the democratic gains of the “third wave of democracies” and unilateral state actions (including extraterritorial regulatory reach). Additionally, the panelists will address the limits of sovereign authority across jurisdictions as practitioners and scholars grapple with fundamental questions about the future of cross-border legal frameworks. The panel brings together perspectives from Brazil, Argentina, and the United States to explore how the rule of law operates in practice: from the enforceability of foreign-law-governed agreements in domestic courts, to the regulatory challenges posed by crypto assets and digital financial products, to the enduring role of international institutions in fostering cooperation even in a fragmented geopolitical landscape. Drawing on both public and private international law traditions, the discussion will consider how individuals, companies, and civil

PANEL 10: Latin American Merger Control Under Fire: How is Antitrust Influencing the M&A Activity in the Region? Latin American antitrust enforcement faces several challenges: lack of a unified regulatory body, very different approaches to enforcement by regulators and even different ultimate goals when enforcing policy. Merger control is a clear example of that: when planning for a multi-j filing strategy across Latin America, the strategies significantly change when taking into account that some regulators may have complex economic analysis, others may have a focus on more traditional approaches and there may be others in which non-antitrust issues may be key for clearance. The panel will cover Brazil, Argentina, Chile and Uruguay to analyze their significant developments in recent years regarding mergers, both from a substantive and procedural perspective. These developments	PANEL 11: Cross-Border Litigation Tools for Success: Strategy and Tactics for Winning International Disputes The panel will discuss cross-border litigation, focusing first on the strategic considerations of choice of law, jurisdiction and venue, and second on tactical issues that typically arise. The panel will explore how to craft a solid strategy to bring a case or defend a claim, including considerations of applicable law, jurisdictional considerations, and future enforceability. Some of the questions raised are: • Who owns the output of AI? How can AI be owned? How can AI be used to generate IP? • Can AI output be protected? Are humans necessary? Does the protection of AI change among different IP – patents, trademarks, copyrights, trade secrets, designs and data? • What is the current state of copyright infringement for training AI models? Fair use? Moral rights? • Can the output be licensed? Who can license and what can be licensed?

PANEL 16: The Defense Industry, The Sleeping Giant Is Wide Awake	PANEL 17: International Arbitration in a Changing World: Energy Transition and Investment Disputes	PANEL 18: The Growth of Asian Investment in the Americas – What has Changed and What has Not
The accelerated increase in public procurement of defense capacities (and, accordingly, the relevant public funds dedicated to this sector) driven by the threat of conflict have sparked a dormant industry with cross border contracts and regulation around the world. However, the defense industry is a heavily regulated and supervised industry that presents challenges in certified manufacturing, regulated sales to governments by private stakeholders that must be sanctioned by other governments and sanctions among trading blocks that must be carefully overseen, and the need of security and sustainability of the supply chain. The financing associated with said spending also spurs challenges for lenders, takers of loans and suppliers. Public procurement, international trade of weapons and double use equipment, anti-corruption, foreign direct investment regulations and foreign direct investment oversight in M&A, anti-trust, tariffs on raw materials and tight oversight from minerals to final product and further scrutinized by public watchdogs. These are the challenges that defense industry lawyers and the practitioners that advise them face, whether they are the established industry powerhouses or industry start-up newcomers, as well as the VC and PE funds that invest in them. This panel will discuss the delicate balance of a sprawling industry that had been a sleeping giant for many years.	As global demand for energy and critical minerals accelerates, governments and investors are navigating an increasingly complex regulatory and geopolitical landscape. Large-scale investments in mining, infrastructure, and energy projects—particularly in emerging markets—are giving rise, or are likely to give rise, to new disputes and arbitration claims. This panel will examine recent developments in international arbitration, focusing on disputes arising from energy transition policies, critical mineral projects, and shifting regulatory frameworks. Panelists will discuss emerging trends in investor–state and commercial arbitration and the challenges facing both investors and states in this evolving environment.	Commerce between the Americas and the Asia-Pacific region has always been active, in a wide variety of areas including manufactured goods and capital investment from the Asia-Pacific region into the Americas, and agricultural products and natural resources from the Americas to the Asia-Pacific region. However, the nature of the commerce, the types of goods imported and exported, and the relative roles of various countries (with the added twist in recent years of rapidly evolving international tariff regimes) have constantly changed. The panelists will discuss select topics in this area and make some general observations on the state of the current legal and commercial relationship between the Americas and the Asia-Pacific region.

In the last decade, several high-profile international corruption cases ended up in differed prosecution agreements with US and/or foreign departments of justice. The aftermath of these largely publicized cases raises many issues for individuals targeted by the internal investigations that ultimately led to such prosecution agreements in which they were stigmatized. This panel will discuss whether negotiated corporate resolutions and company-led internal investigations can still protect fair process for individuals once corporate cooperation, internal evidence-gathering, and factual admissions in differed prosecution agreements help shaping later prosecutions against these individuals. Among other questions, this panel will examine (i) how modern internal investigations increasingly sit at the crossroads of settlement strategy, compliance remediation, and criminal defense, (ii) whether a company's understandable interest in securing a negotiated outcome with public authorities/prosecutors can distort the search for truth when the same internal investigation frames allegations against executives, employees, or third party individuals, and (iii) whether efficiency, remediation, and increasingly coordinated cross-border law enforcement can be reconciled with adversarial fairness for individuals and credible truth-finding for jurisdictions. Whether you are working in-house, as defense attorneys, whether you are investigating or are prosecuting such cases, the international dimension of this topic makes it all the more relevant since across the world anticorruption authorities and law enforcement (e.g. the DOJ and SEC in the US, the SFO in the UK, the PNF and AFA in France) promote self-reporting, remediation, leniency, and whistleblowing, while privilege, access-to-file, inspection powers, and defense safeguards remain materially different across jurisdictions.

Artificial intelligence is rapidly changing not only how legal work is performed, but also how the next generation of attorneys will be trained, evaluated, and expected to practice. Developed by NYSBA's Young Lawyers Section, this panel will examine AI's impact on the legal profession from the perspective of young and emerging practitioners. Panelists will discuss how AI may reshape entry-level roles and the legal job market; the challenges of developing sound judgment and core lawyering skills when technology can perform—or appear to perform—traditional junior-level work; and evolving client expectations regarding speed, cost, and efficiency. The discussion will also address clients' increasing use and misuse of AI for legal advice, along with practical concerns surrounding accuracy, confidentiality, privacy, and responsible use. Rather than treating AI as simply a technological or ethical issue, this panel will explore what it means for the future development of lawyers and the profession itself.

Decisions involving the collection, use, sharing and protection of personal data are increasingly giving rise to regulatory investigations, private litigation, class actions and other forms of legal exposure. This panel will examine how privacy enforcement and litigation are developing across different jurisdictions, comparing the roles of regulators, courts and private litigants and the different enforcement models available in each legal system. Using recent cases and practical fact patterns, panelists will explore how similar conduct may lead to different legal consequences depending on the jurisdiction. The discussion will address emerging areas of privacy risk, including transparency and consent, tracking technologies and third-party vendors, sensitive and biometric data, security incidents, and the growing intersection between privacy and artificial intelligence. Panelists will also consider what recent enforcement actions and litigation can teach organizations about identifying and mitigating privacy risks before they develop into disputes. Moderator: Jay G. Safer	PANEL 33: Cross-Border Finance in Latin America: Bridging New York Law and Local Market Realities New York law governs most cross-border credit in Latin America, but the collateral, the borrower, and the enforcement court are usually local. This panel examines the seam between the two. Panelists will address where New York documentation does the work it promises, where it depends on local law to have any effect, and how practitioners bridge the gap in practice rather than in theory. This panel will bring together practitioners from New York, Mexico, Bolivia and Chile to discuss the practical challenges that arise throughout the life cycle of cross-border financings. The discussion will address financing structures and market trends, collateral and security interests, insolvency and competing bankruptcy regimes, foreign exchange and regulatory considerations, due diligence, and the role of multilateral and development finance institutions. Panelists will also explore emerging structures and asset classes, including U.S. capital markets refinancings, digital infrastructure and other innovative financing models, highlighting how local market realities interact with New York-law expectations. Moderator: José Ricardo de Bastos Martins
